A vacuum cleaner is a critical household tool that helps you keep your home clean and fresh. But like any other appliance, it can experience issues over time that might require repair. In this post, we'll explore seven signs that your vacuum cleaner might need to visit a vacuum repair shop. If you're in Utah and looking for quality repair services, David's Vacuums is here to help.

Reduced Suction Power

If your vacuum isn't picking up debris like it used to, it may be a sign of reduced suction power. This issue may stem from a clogged hose, a full bag or dust bin, or a broken fan motor.

Unusual Noises

Vacuums typically have a steady hum when working correctly. If you notice unusual loud noises, it might be an indication of a problem with the motor or a blockage somewhere in the unit.

Emitting a Burning Smell

A burning smell from your vacuum cleaner can suggest multiple issues, such as an overheating motor or a problem with the drive belt. In either case, professional inspection is needed.

Frequent Shut Offs

If your vacuum cleaner keeps shutting off during use, it's an obvious sign that something is wrong. This issue can be due to a faulty power cable or an overheating motor.

Broken or Worn Out Belt

If your vacuum cleaner's brush roll isn't spinning efficiently, the cause might be a broken or worn-out belt, which will need replacing.

Damaged Cord

A damaged power cord can result in your vacuum not turning on at all or cutting off mid-use. If you notice that the cord is frayed or twisted, it's time for a repair or replacement.

Dust Emissions

If your vacuum is spewing dust back into the room, it might point to a full or faulty bag or dust bin, or a problem with the vacuum's filtration system.

Take Control: Schedule Your Vacuum Repair Now

If your vacuum cleaner showcases one or more of these signs, it's time to act. An efficient vacuum cleaner is key to a clean home, and any delay in repair services could cause more harm to your appliance.
